The matter of elevator etiquette having struggled to the top again the views of one man upon the subject may be interesting "In the first place," said a mea to whom the question was submitted, "I would say that under no croumstances should ladies expect men to remove their hats if there be the slightest suspicion of a draught in the elevator, and my own experience has been that they are seldom without it. To say nothing of lesser and simply annoying ailments, some of the most serious maiadies are traced by physicians to a no more serious cause than a brief chilling draught. In the second place the question would be where the elevator is situated.

"If in a business building, where people are supposed to go for business purposes, and where the observation of social forms and ceremonial etiquette is not important, and perhaps not even sensible. I would say that men should not be asked to remove their hats, and I do not think that they are disposed to do so. When we come to a hotel elevator the question grows finer. There are hotels where it would be a little pretentious and almost out of place to indulge in such a ceremony. In the smaller country hotels, for instance, and in hotels generally where there is little pretension to social style, the removal of hats in ele-

"In some places I think it would be even impolite, on the principle observed by the German prince, who, when his rustic guest poured out his coffee in a saucer, did the same thing himself, that the untutored fellow might not suffer from his blunder. On the other hand, in hotels, where there is a general observance of social forms, I think that if, as already said, there be no draught in the elevator, the hat should be Pacific railway. removed in the presence of ladies, and my experience is that it is an invariable custom for men to do so in such places. I may add, however, that it is a custom which obtains only in America. In England and on the continent no gentleman thinks of do-ing such a thing."—New York Times.

Protection Against Tornsdoes.

When trying to escape from a tornado never run to the northeast, east or southeast. Never take refuge in a forest or a grove of trees, or near any object that may be overturned by the wind. A frame build-ing is safer than one built of brick or stone. The former is more elastic and holds to-gether longer; the latter goes down in the first crash, and the debris is whirled into a heap in the center of the foundation. In a frame structure the cellar is the safest place, but in a brick or stone building it is the most perilous. In the former case the debris is carried away from the foundation, while in the latter instance the cellar is filled with it.

The torusdo cave offers absolute security to life and limb, and no means of protection can replace it for that purpose. As regards protection to property, no building can be made sufficiently large, strong, high or low to resist the force of the tornado's vortex. There is no changing the path of the tornado by the employment of explo-sives or by any artificial barrier. To contemplate the dispersion of the cloud by the idie. All buildings should be constructed as would be done without the knowledge

The show this year promises to be un-usually attractive including as it does a magnificent display of the Veiled Prophets. complished by organized capital, the safe ty of one being assured by the legitimate and successful co-operation of many. The writer strongly advocated this method of protection during his tornado investigations in the west in 1879, and now several million dollars' worth of property is thus insured every year.—Lieut. J. P. Finley in

The State's Relation to Marriage. To the state marriage is a civil contract between a man and woman. It can be nothing else or more than that. And the only interest of the state, as state, is that all the rights and duties involved in a civil Large sorrel horse, buggy and harness. September 27, 1840; horse about 10 years old, white spot on forehead; sear on near side, low down, about 4 inches long Buggy and harness old, somewhat dilapidated; leather fly-net. $20.00 additional will be paid by the sheriff of Seigwick country for the arrest and conviction of thief.

Contract shall be maintained to the end of public order. The moment that it attempts anything beyond this it is a tresposer on personal rights and works only mischief. It is hardly matter for dispute that those who have claimed to be acting for God in political matters in the past have been authors of cruelty and injustice.

Most writers on "divorce reform" as Most writers on "divorce reform" as sume that the one great end to be aimed at is to prevent divorce by any and all means. Their highest, their one ideal, seems to be to keep people tied together without re-

The Crar as an Art Collector. The czar of Russia is one of the greatest art collectors in the world. The acquisitory. His study at Gatschina is a miniature museum, in which all branches of art are represented. His majesty is partial to the modern French school of painting, though he does all he can to encourage Russian artistic talent. In all that concerns art be has the full sympathy of his charming consort, who is herself not only a collector, but an accomplished painter and sketcher. The crarina admires Meissonier more than any other living artist, and is never tired of copying his pictures. The czar is not a selfish amateur. Although be makes all his palaces treasure houses of art he still aids the public museums in money and in kind, and so crowded with objects are the existing institutions that his majesty is about to have built in St. Petersburg a national museum which shall be devoted to Russian contemporary art.—News and

My cabman in Rome, whom I employed daily while in that city, is a gross finguist. He learned English on top of his cab, and whenever his cab was standing in the streets idle he opened his book on the box and studied until his customers were ready for a drive. He is president of the Cabmen's union in Rome and owns several horses and cabs. Such thrift is unusual among Italians, but occasionally one meets the old type of Marcus Aurelius or Casar. Some of the Italians, especially the Floren-tines, are splendid specimens of physique and intelligence, but for wit and sparkle the Genoese surpass all Europeans. They have the epigrammatic genius of the French, the humor of the Irish, the genius for trade of the English and the deviltry of the Italians.
